Criminal Background/Driving History

Prospective students must be aware that their criminal background/driving history will directly impact their employability in the law enforcement field. While most convictions or a poor driving record do not bar a person from a law enforcement certification, it may make it very difficult to obtain employment in the field. Types of convictions that would prohibit employment in the law enforcement field include any domestic violence criminal conviction or any felony conviction that bars the person from possessing a firearm as an adult. Juveniles who have been adjudicated delinquent of an act which would bar them from possessing a firearm as an adult cannot be certified as a law enforcement officer.
